Foreword

The following study, conducted over a period of eights years, was undertaken to document the organization of the Continental Army's command structure during its winter encampment at Valley Forge (December 19, 1777-January 19, 1778).

When General Washington's army arrived at Valley Forge it was an ill fed, poorly supplied, and indifferently trained organization. Washington used the time of this winter encampment to vastly improve the army's training and logistical support, as well as its command structure.

This study lists the command organizations, as it was comprised when the Continental Army left Valley Forge in the spring of 1778. The data has been verified from a number of sources including official pay records of the Continental units involved.

Most brigades were named after commanders but also bore Continental Brigade names. We attempted in the work to show both designations. At one time or another there were ninety-one regiments at Valley Forge, they are included in the study even if they were on site for only a short period of time. They are listed numerically by colony and are not in any particular order of battle.

Because Revolutionary Army records are at best scarce, and when available fragmented, you may note some gaps in certain organization's list of officers. It is hoped as additional documentation comes to light, some of their missing pieces might be found.

We wished to express our thanks to the Valley Forge National Historical Park Administration for their assistance and especially The Friends of Valley Forge Park, formally the Valley Forge Interpretive Association, for its financial and administrative support during the course of this project.

WILLIAM ALEXANDER (LORD STIRLING) 1726-1783

Born in New York, Alexander's title was never recognized in England. His father held the title until losing it and all the associated lands during the Jacobite rebellion of 1715. In the 1760's Alexander was living in New Jersey, a prominent and wealthy man, married to the Governor's sister. He was a member of the New Jersey provincial assembly and participated in the French and Indian War as an aide to Governor Shirley of Massachusetts. On November 7, 1775 he was commissioned a Colonel of the 1st New Jersey Regiment. On March 1, 1776 he was promoted to Brigadier General and on the 7th of March he succeeded General Lee as commander of the New York City garrison. Captured at the Battle of Long Island, he was exchanged the following Month. He participated in the Battle of Trenton and on February 19, 1777 he was promoted to Major General. He served in the Battles of Brandywine, Germantown, and Monmouth. Later he was appointed to command the Northern Department. He died of gout while in that command on January 15, 1783.

JOHN ARMSTRONG 1717-1795

Born in Ireland, Armstrong served in the militia during the French and Indian War. On March 1, 1776 he was appointed Brigadier General in the Continental Army, in spite of his advanced age and rheumatism. He was sent south and participated in the successful defense of Charleston, S.C. in 1776. He resigned his commission on April 4, 1777 out of dissatisfaction with the Continental Army, but on the 5th of April he was appointed Brigadier General of the Pennsylvania Militia. He participated in the Battles of Brandywine and Germantown. On January 9, 1778 he was promoted to Major General of the Pennsylvania Militia and held that command for the remainder of the war. Armstrong also served in the Congress in 1778-1780 and in 1787-1788.

THOMAS CONWAY 1733-1800

Born in Ireland and raised in France, Conway entered the French Army as a Lieutenant in 1747. In 1776, then a Major, he received permission to go to America. He arrived in 1777 and was appointed Brigadier General on May 13th at Washington's suggestion. He served in Sullivan's Division at Brandywine and Germantown. During the winter of 1777-1778, Conway was involved in a plot to replace Washington as Commander-in-Chief of the American Army with General Horatio Gates. On December 13, 1777 Conway was promoted to Major-General, but his involvement in the "Conway Cabal" led Congress not to assign him to active command. His threat of resignation was a bluff to force Congress to assign him an active command, but Congress called his bluff by accepting his resignation on April 28, 1778, much to Conway's surprise. He returned to France and rejoined the French Army. He was able to advance in the French Army and became Governor General of all French Forces at the Cape of Good Hope. In 1793, he was replaced because of his loyalty to the crown. He died in exile about 1800.

LOUIS LEBEQUE de PRESLE DUPORTAIL 1743-1802

The son of a French nobleman, Duportail began his military career as an engineer in 1762, rising to Lieutenant Colonel by 1777. He was one of four military engineers sent to America in response to a request from Benjamin Franklin. He joined the army on February 13, 1777 and by July 1777 was appointed Colonel of engineers. By November 17, 1777 he had risen to Brigadier Colonel. He worked on the Delaware River defenses and fortified military encampments at Valley Forge and Hudson Highlands. He was sent to Charleston, S.C. in 1780 where he was captured by the British. He was exchanged later that year, participated in the siege at Yorktown and was promoted to Major General on November 16, 1781. He resigned his commission on October 18, 1783 and returned to France where he continued to serve the King. The French Revolution forced him to flee. He returned to America in 1794 and remained here until he was given permission to return to France in 1802. He died on shipboard during the voyage to France.

JOHN GLOVER 1732-1797

Glover was born in Salem, Massachusetts, and moved to Marblehead as a boy. Glover worked his way up from shoemaker to become a wealthy ship owner and fisherman. He served as a militia officer from 1759-73. As a member of the Marblehead Committee of Correspondence, he became a colonel of the 21st Massachusetts Regiment in 1775, in charge of 1,000 fishermen who manned armed ships on Massachusetts Bay. His regiment's designation changed to the 14th Continental Regiment, and as such participated in the defense of New York City in the summer of 1776. During this action, the men in Glover's command helped the Continental Army slip out from under a British siege by ferrying the troops across the East River. Glover's Marbleheaders also made possible Washington's famous crossing of the Delaware River in December of 1776.

When their enlistment ended and the regiment disbanded, Glover returned home to care for his sick wife. After initially rejecting an appointment to Brigadier General in February 1777, a personal letter from General Washington persuaded him to serve. He then served with General Gates during the Saratoga campaign, and General Lafayette in the attack against Newport, Rhode Island. In the spring of 1779, he succeeded General Sullivan as Commander of Providence, Rhode Island, and remained in the Hudson Highlands during the Yorktown campaign. Suffering from poor health, Glover retired on half-pay on July 22, 1782. He was breveted a Major General on September 30, 1783.

NATHANAEL GREENE 1742-1786

Born in Rhode Island he went into his family's business, first at Batowmut, then at Coventry. In 1770-1772 and 1775 he was a deputy in the Rhode Island Assembly. In May 1775, while serving as a private he was appointed Brigadier General in the Rhode Island militia. On June 22, 1775 he was given the same rank in the Continental Army. His talent for organization and supply management surfaced during the siege of Boston. He commanded the American Army on Long Island, but was relieved before the battle due to illness. In August of 1776, he was promoted to Major General and took command of the troops in New Jersey. He served at the Battle of Trenton. During the winter of 1776-1777 Washington sent him to Congress to defend the performance of the army. He participated in the Battle of Brandywine and led the main attack at the Battle of Germantown. He commanded the forts on the Delaware River, but was unable to hold them. At Valley Forge on February 15, 1778, he was appointed Quartermaster General of the Army while retaining his combat command. He served at the Battle of Monmouth and at Newport. He improved the performance of the Quartermaster Department to a considerable degree, however his methods of operation were sharply criticized by Congress. Greene asked for a vote of confidence, but was refused. Instead, Congress adopted a plan drafted by the former Quartermaster, General Thomas Mifflin, on July 15, 1780. On August 3, 1780 Greene resigned as Quartermaster General. Following Benedict Arnold's defection, Greene was given command of the Hudson Highlands Department in the hope that he could restore order to the Southern Army following the defeat at Camden, South Carolina. His campaigns in the South form the basis for his reputation as one of the few real military men in the American Army. Greene retired in 1783 but money problems forced him to leave Rhode Island in 1785 and move to an estate near Savannah, Georgia. The estate was partial payment for his services during the war. He died the following year.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON 1757-1804

Born on the island of St. Christopher, Hamilton attended college in the colony of New York. He became interested in politics and raised a volunteer company of artillery in 1775. Hamilton and his men served at the Battles of Long Island, White Plains, Trenton, and Princeton. On March 1, 1777 he was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel and appointed an aide to Washington. He served as an aide until July 1781 when he was given command of a regiment of Light Infantry which he led at Yorktown. He was breveted a Colonel on September 30, 1783 and retired in December 1783. He was heavily involved in the finances of the new Nation, serving as Secretary of the Treasury, among other government positions. For various personal and political reasons, he was challenged to a duel by Aaron Burr and died from the resulting wound in July 1804.

JEDEDIAH HUNTINGTON 1743-1818

Born in Connecticut to an extremely wealthy family, Huntington graduated from Harvard in 1763 and entered his family's business as a merchant. He joined the Connecticut Militia and served at the Siege of Boston as Colonel of the Connecticut troops. Oddly enough, this was to his only participation in any of the actions fought during the war. He served mainly in administrative positions. He commanded a brigade during the encampment at Valley Forge, joining his command just before the encampment started and transferring north just before they left camp. He was breveted a Major General September 30, 1783 and retired a short time later. He resumed his business affairs and was later appointed customs collector for the port of New London during President Washington's administration. He held this post for 26 years.

JOHANN de KALB 1721-1780

Born in Bavaria, he entered the French Army in September 1743 and served with great distinction rising to the rank of Brigadier General. He requested and received permission to go to America in 1777 in order to further his military career. He sailed with the Marquis de Lafayette, and after an initial disagreement with Congress over rank he was promoted to Major General in September of 1777. He wintered at Valley Forge with the army, but was not given a command equal to his rank and talents for nearly two years. In 1780, he was sent south with Maryland and Delaware troops to relieve Charleston, but arrived after the city had been surrendered. General Gates then arrived and took command of the Southern Army using de Kalb's troops as a base to rebuild those forces. However, he ignored de Kalb's advice, an error which led to the American defeat at Camden on August 16, 1780. Wounded during the battle, de Kalb died three days later. Unfortunately, his talents were never fully utilized by the Americans.

HENRY KNOX 1750-1806

Born in Massachusetts, Knox joined the Militia at the age of 18 and taught himself the art of war by reading the books he sold in his bookstore. He served as a volunteer at Bunker Hill. Washington was impressed by Knox and his knowledge of artillery. On November 17, 1775 he appointed Knox Colonel of the small Continental Artillery Regiment. In this position, Knox moved a large group of artillery pieces from Fort Ticonderoga to Boston in midwinter. Knox participated in the Battle of Long Island and at the Battles of Trenton and Princeton. He was promoted to Brigadier General in late December 1776. He served in the Battles of Brandywine and Germantown and was present for part of the Valley Forge encampment. By 1778, the Continental Artillery consisted of four regiments. Knox served at Monmouth and at Yorktown and was promoted to Major General in the spring of 1982. In August 1782 he took command of West Point. From December 23, 1783 to June 20, 1784 Knox served as Commander-in-Chief succeeding Washington. He retired, but was called back to serve as Secretary of War, a post he held until 1794. Expensive tastes and poor investments brought him financial problems after the war.

MARIE JOSEPH PAUL YVES ROCH GILBERT du MOTIER. MARQUIS DE LAFAYETTE 1757-1834
Lafayette was left, through a series of deaths, the head of one of richest and most powerful families in France at the age of fourteen. He served as an officer in the French Army, but had little actual military experience. He sailed for America in 1777, against the order of the King of France. Initially, he was not well received by Congress, until he offered to serve as a volunteer, paying his own expenses. He was appointed a Major General in July 1777. He was wounded in the leg at the Battle of Brandywine, and after nearly two months of recuperating, he rejoined the army just after the Battle of Germantown. He was involved in the planning of an expedition into Canada during the winter of 1777-1778, but when that was cancelled he rejoined the army at Valley Forge. He commanded troops at Barren Hill and at the Battle of Monmouth, and assisted at the siege of New Port, a combined French-American operation. In January 1779, he returned to France to secure additional French aid for the Americans. After succeeding at this task, he returned to America in 1780 and was sent to Virginia in time to participate in the siege at Yorktown.

JOHN LAURENS 1754-1782

Born in South Carolina and educated in London and Geneva, Laurens returned to the colonies in 1777 and served as a volunteer aide to Washington. He participated in the Battles of Brandywine and Germantown. He was stationed at Valley Forge during the encampment and fought in the Battle of Monmouth. Promoted to Lieutenant Colonel in 1779, he continued to serve as an aide until late 1779 when he returned to South Carolina. He served at Savannah and was captured at Charleston in 1780. He was exchanged in the spring of 1781 and sent to France by Congress to assist Benjamin Franklin. Returning to America in time to participate in Yorktown. He was killed the following year, 1782, in a skirmish in South Carolina.

EBENEZER LEARNED 1728-1801

Born in Oxford, Massachusetts, his pre-war career included serving as a captain in the militia and a delegate to the provincial Congress. On April 19, 1775 he was commissioned a Colonel and served at Lexington, Concord, and Bunker Hill and the siege of Boston. In April 1777, he was commissioned a Brigadier General and returned to active duty in the Northern Department. He served in the Battle of Saratoga, then joined the army at Valley Forge. In March 1778, he resigned because of physical disabilities. He returned to Massachusetts where he served in the legislature in 1783.

CHARLES LEE 1731-1782

Born in England, Lee began his military career in 1747. In 1773, he retired to Virginia on half pay in 1773, having served in both the British and Polish armies. He immediately became involved in the fight for independence and was appointed America's first Major General. He served at the siege of Boston, briefly commanded New York City, then was transferred South where he successfully defended Charleston, South Carolina from a major British attack in 1776. He then returned to New York where he served at the Battle of White Plains. Lee was in command of troops in New York and Northern New Jersey when he was captured, in December 1776. He was exchanged in April 1778 and after briefly joining the army at Valley Forge, he traveled to York, Pennsylvania to complain to Congress about his lack of promotion. He rejoined the army in time to serve at the Battle of Monmouth. His actions at Monmouth resulted in a court martial and three challenges to duels. The court martial resulted in a conviction and suspended for one year. Lee was wounded in the first duel and the subsequent duels were never fought. Lee waited out his suspension in Virginia, but at the end of the year, again offended Congress and was dismissed from the army. Lee spent his last years in Philadelphia.

WILLIAM MAXWELL 1733-1796

Born in Ireland, Maxwell served in both the local militia and in regular British regiments for twenty years, rising to the rank of Colonel before retiring to New Jersey. In 1775, he was elected to the New Jersey provincial Congress. In 1776, he was appointed Colonel of the Second New Jersey Regiment. He served on the ill fated Canadian expedition and a short time later was promoted to Brigadier General. He served at the Battle of Brandywine and was court martialled for being drunk at the Battle of Germantown; however, the case was never decided. He commanded the New Jersey Brigade at Valley Forge and served at the Battle of Monmouth and on
